As I predicted before the general election in April's newsletter, a coalition government has been formed. I don't think that I am the only person who is sceptical about the potential pitfalls of this particular arrangement with each party led by differing motivations and pursuing their own political agenda. But for the sake of UK business, the coalition agreement must work.

This situation that has arisen actually has great synergy with the work that Park City regularly undertakes for our clients. One of our main objectives when working with a client is to formulate a clear strategy to drive that company forward, through safer working practices and a detailed change management program.

Managing change is hard. In order to move forward, people that would not usually work together have to work together. Employees' goals and motivations often have to be realigned. Managers have to make unpopular decisions and provide decisive leadership.

As your dedicated partner, Park City will support and assist you and your team through this difficult change management process. Our 24 hour telephone and e-mail helpline means that you can contact us at any time day or night for advice and guidance.

It is our comprehensive portfolio of outsourced business services and Park City's personal service and face to face delivery that adds value to your business and differentiates us in the BPO sector. Who knows, David Cameron and Nick Clegg might choose to give us a call!
